The future will be shaped by the steps we take now, as we start to recognise the importance of the natural world and wildlife for our health and well-being.

The landscaping has been designed to provide a net biodiversity gain of 86%, ensuring the development enhances the ecological value of the site.

A wildlife pond will be built in the landscaped courtyard. This has been designed with input from a local wildlife group, it will include planting to replicate the natural ecological diversity of the neighbouring Sites of Special Scientific Interest.

Native and near-native trees, scrub species and wildflowers, taken from the RHS Plants for Pollinators list, will be planted, attracting a range of insects, birds and mammals to the site.
